The nucleotide sequence of the measles virus genome and the amino acid sequence of its major envelope proteins have been determined and comparison made with the published Rubella virus (RV) sequence (Almeida et al., 1986). The nucleotide sequence of the genome of Measles virus (MV) is of size 26,222 bases and contains 6 genes of which the largest, which encodes the major envelope glycoprotein (MV Gp), comprises 1466 bases. It exhibits 86% homology with RV. The major MV proteins, Gp and the phosphoprotein (P) are shown to be encoded in the first and third gene, respectively. The sequence of the second gene, which encodes the matrix (M) protein, shows an insertion of an additional copy of 46 nucleotides in comparison to the RV sequence. The nucleotide sequence of the last gene, which encodes the nucleocapsid (N) protein is also very similar to the RV sequence and shows one insertion in the P gene.

The sequence data are discussed
